In an increasingly compressed world in which people are confronted with their apparent differences, dialogue is the most promising form of communication for bringing people together, yet acknowledging their personal, social, and cultural differences. In this situation there is an increasing need of theories, methods, and practices that can be used not only to study but also to stimulate dialogical relationships between multi-voiced selves in a globalizing world. Dialogical Self Theory (DST), devised as a "bridging theory," is well-equipped to realize these purposes. DST aims to stimulate dialogue on three interconnected levels: personal, focusing on the multiplicity of voices in a dialogical self; social, stimulating dialogue within and between social groups; and global, fostering dialogue between cultural identities in a boundary-crossing world. Since its first publication in the American Psychologist in 1992, DST has attracted a great diversity of scientists and practitioners across the boundaries of countries, cultures, and disciplines. According to a counting in 2019, based on Web of Science, the Theory is applied in more than 90 countries. The present book series is an initiative of the International Society for Dialogical Science (ISDS). This Society, open to paid membership since 2019, is launched to enable members to exchange their specific expertise and to make productive use of DST as a linking conceptual framework. Elaborating on these development, the ISDS starts, in cooperation with IAP, a book series under the title "Dialogical Self Theory: Personal, social, and global" with the purpose to stimulate the cooperation of scientists and practitioners across countries, cultures and disciplines.

The 21st century and its many challenges (invasion of digital technology, climate change, health crises, political crises, etc.) alert us that we need new educational responses, led by new education professionals.

Research has shown that for these professionals to change in a substantial and profound way, they must change their identity, that is, the way in which they give meaning and meaning to their professional work.

This book exposes, based on one of the most current and advanced theories for analyzing identity change -the theory of the dialogical self-, what changes should take place and how to promote them in eleven fundamental professional profiles in current education (teachers of student-teachers, primary & secondary teachers, inclusive teachers, inquiring teachers, mentors, school principals, university teachers, academic advisors, technologic/hybrid teachers, Learning specialists & educational researchers).
